PAUL TERRY-TOONS

"GOLF NUTS"

By Frank Moser and Paul Terry

Produced by Audio-Cinema, Inc.

Golf in its more frivolous moments becomes an hilarious affair as played on the Terry-Toon Miniature Course. No eighteen holes were ever filled with so many laughs, and as for its appeal, the globe is hardly more universal!

Without a set of confining rules to restrict them, a row of mice tee off together, and skip merrily along, muffing nary a ball. An elephant, out for exercise, hits a ball through a pipe hazard, forces his bulk through the narrow pipe, and, emerging, resumes his natural form. The most ingeniously constructed courses don't have the interesting hazards this has, and the players do it in a hundred laughs.

A poorly aimed ball hits the window of a Chinaman's laundry and a flock of irate chinks chase the mouse all over the place. The chase is fast and furious, with the mouse getting the worst of it in a collision. His spirit leaves his body, and is carried to the higher realm in an elevator. The skeleton operator announces each floor in department store fashion. On the ladies underwear floor, females in abbreviated costume go into a dance. The toys on the toy floor do their stuff, and so on to the top, where St. Peter, with a kingly crown on his head, asks "What's Your Score?" The mouse whispers his answer. "Liar," roars St. Peter, and the mouse is hurtled down into hell. Even the devils in hell play golf, and they have a great time, using the mouse for a ball.

Timely and tricky, "Golf Nuts" hits the ball as sure-fire entertainment.
